National Anti-Slavery Standard.

VOL. XXIV. NO. 3. NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1863. WHOLE NO. 1,199.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY ON SATURDAY
AT $2 50 PER ANNUM,
BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY,
AT ITS OFFICE, No. 48 Beekman Street, New York,
AND AT THE OFFICE OF THE PENNSYLVANIA ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY,
106 North-Tenth Street, Philadelphia.

Letters for publication, or relating in any way to the editorial conduct of the paper, should be addressed to the NATIONAL ANTI-SLAVERY STANDARD, NEW YORK."

Letters enclosing subscriptions, or relating in any way to the business affairs of the paper, should be addressed, "PUBLISHERS OF THE NATIONAL ANTI-SLAVERY STANDARD, NEW YORK."

ADVERTISEMENTS, 10 cents per line each insertion.

Pro-Slavery.

Selections.

In this Department we give place to such extracts from the Pro-Slavery Press, North and South, as serve to illustrate the character of Slavery and the spirit of its champions and apologists.

ANNIVERSARY WEEK.

From Bennett's Herald.

One of the most peculiar traits of metropolitan society is the heterogeneous assemblage of pharisees, enthusiasts, pious old ladies, and strong-minded women of an uncertain age, who flock to this city from the remote districts and from New England to the week of anniversaries. Two years ago the intensity of the war excitement kept them away. Last year they reappeared in considerable extent. This week they are back again in full force; and the amount of stupendous lying, pharisaical cant, infidel profanity and Abolitionist treason that has been given utterance to during the week, in the churches and public places where the anniversaries have held their meetings, has been perfectly appalling.

In the way of steep lying let us take as a specimen brick the report of the American and Foreign Christian Union. The reports of the other societies are got up on a good deal the same principle of sticking at nothing in the way of a bouncing lie. Simple-minded deacons, who know more about raising onions than they do about the operations of the human mind, and old spinsters, who must have a husband, or a lapdog, or a pet dog, to kiss that the most reckless parson invents for them, and pull up from the recesses of their spacious pockets and old-fashioned reticules enough to keep the concern going on for another year, when the same process is repeated, only in an exaggerated form, if that were possible. This, therefore, is the harvest week of hypocritical humbugs who are too lazy or too worthless to turn to any honest employment.

If the May celebrations here were restricted to the religious societies they would prove little attractive. Their proceedings are usually as dull as the intellect of their supporters. But the strong minded women, the abolitionists and the sallow faced fanatics from the rural districts all flock here at the same time, with an invincible itching for notoriety, and caring little what fools they make of themselves so that they can get an audience to listen to them and see their speeches reported in the morning papers. We have reported the proceedings of the Anti-Slavery Society and of the Loyal Woman's League, as being the only anniversaries that had any spiciness in them. Wendell Phillips was the great lion of the Abolitionists, and he actually raised a treason in five minutes than Vallandigham could descant in as many hours. Why Copperhead should be sent to Dixie or the Dry Tortugas, and Silver Tongue permitted to crucify President Lincoln and his entire Cabinet with impunity, is a question to which we should like a satisfactory answer. They ought certainly to be paired off, chained together by the ankles; and if that punishment would not bring Vallandigham to every repentance it would be only because he is incorrigible.

As to the Women's Convention, that which was originally designed for a most patriotic and praiseworthy motive has been distorted into an atheistical, revolutionary woman's rights movement, under the leadership of Lucy Stone, Susan B. Anthony and Ernestine L. Rose. At their meeting in the Church of the Puritans one of the progressive spirits boasted that she belonged to no sect or creed, political, religious or moral, and another questioned the existence of a divinity.

It is of such elements that our May anniversaries are largely compounded. All the swivelling hypocrites, fanatics and sentimentalists from New York and New England congregate here at this time, and find a theatre for the recital of their fables, the spouting of their treason and the exhibition of their notics. Great is New York.

From The New York Observer.

It is painful to notice the increased and excited spirit of vituperation and ultra fanaticism which pervaded the abolition speeches at several meetings. We say it is painful, because at such a time as this when the nation is rent with intestine war, and it is of infinite importance to unite all men in the single work of restoring the Union and the Constitution, and especially when the whole country has just been called upon by the President to pray for the restoration of the nation to its former happy condition of unity and peace, it is a shame and a sin for any man to say as Mr. Beecher is reported to have said at the Anniversary of the American Home Missionary Society:

"I say boldly that rather than have the States to resume their place under the Constitution with the power of slavery in them, all just as it was before, I had rather give every child that I have; I had rather embark on a war of twenty years, with all our property and its blood; and a war of twenty years, much as its miseries would be, would be very compared with the untold wretchedness of this nation if we should come out again with slavery flourishing and rampant" (great applause).

The President of the United States, and all loyal patriots, men who love the Union and hate slavery, are anxious to see the Union restored just as it was and then to do and suffer all that is necessary to remove the curse of slavery from the land. But we record our emphatic protest against the "great applause" with which the Home Mission Society meeting received the disloyal and anti-patriotic doctrine of Mr. Beecher. We stand fast by the Constitution and the Administration that supports it, and we write him an enemy who is not praying and working to sustain the right in maintaining its integrity.

Still more disloyal was the language of Wendell Phillips at the Anti-Slavery meeting. Speaking of our government, he said:

"We and monkeys in human attire at Washington; they were determined to compromise, and the South dung back in them for eighteen months, and they were on all-fours for the temptation (applause). Sumter, West Point and rotten Wilmot should be sloughed off from the government as they sloughed off Essex and Fairfax in Cromwell's time.

* * * * * *

"He believed there never would be victory while Halleck was in command. The old proverb said a fool was better a great fool until he had learned Latin, and he thought a man was never incorrigible till he had graduated at West Point (applause). While slavery existed there was danger to the Union. Abraham Lincoln was not President of the United States—the Cabinet controlled him. The first advice to be emancipated was Lincoln (applause). If the government would not obey advice they must obey reverses."

Such infamous language as this is applauded; but scores of men have been put to death in war times for the utterance of words not half so treasonable. The man wants the government to "obey advice" (!), the advice of such men as he, and if not they must "obey reverses." Another of the editors of The Independent boldly took the ground that the black race was in all respects superior to the white race on this continent, declaring that universal amalgamation of the whites and blacks is to take place until the black becomes the dominant race by having absorbed the whites.

We make these records to note the progress of opinion among the leaders of the abolition party who now demand the destruction of the government. Their creed is fully avowed. twenty years (if necessary) of war! the annihilation of the Southern cities!! and AMALGAMATION!!!

A NEW WAR ISSUE.—The hour when danger's troubled night shall depart and the star of peace return has been indefinitely postponed. "What we want, wills," says the French proverb, "heaven wills," and the "women of America," in conclave assembled at the Church of the Puritans, yesterday resolved that peace should never be made in this republic while "women are placed at the mercy of a legislation in which they are not represented." The emancipation of the slaves is no longer the final term of war. Amalgamation itself will not satisfy the Cassandras of the Abolitionists. Mr. Tilton, with his lovely project for redeeming the Union by an extensive manufacture of ideal mulattoes is no better than a Copperhead in the eyes of the daughters of Dr. Cheever. He must prepare for a trip to Liberia or for land lubber upon the London Times, these being the alternatives which the Loyal Female Leaguers of Union Square have laid down as the destiny of all who shrink from according to corkscrew women with silk blooomers their legitimate share in the administration of the country. We trust, however, that Mr. Tilton will vindicate his rights against this Amazonian onslaught. Let him bring the batteries of The Independent to bear upon the ramparts of the Puritan City. Let the combat deepens the better for all the world beside. Tilton may fall in the fray, but the blood of the martyr is the seed of the Church.—World.

THE BRIGHT SIDE OF ONE YEAR'S HISTORY.

[From the Philadelphia Anti-Slavery Society we copy the following admirable summary of the progress of the Anti-Slavery Cause during the year 1862. It is hardly necessary to say that it is from the pen of that clear-sighted and ever faithful friend of the slave, MARY GREW.]

Is these dark days of the Republic there is light in the dwelling of the slave. The mighty revolution which has changed the aspect of all things around us, and evoked a war which is striking fatal blows at commercial prosperity and domestic happiness; which has bathed the land in blood and in tears, and which threatens our national existence, is slowly and surely destroying its own cause, the system of American slavery. Of the four million of slaves, to whose deliverance our life-long labors were pledged, more than three million were, on the morning of the first day of January, 1863, declared by the highest law of the land, thenceforward and forever free; and Northern Abolitionists, from Maine to Minnesota, joined with the Freedmen of the rice-swamps and cotton-fields, from Carolina to Texas, in the glad shout of "Free at last, free at last, thank God Almighty, free at last!" The day of America's jubilee has dawned at last; and we who have watched and striven through the dark night of her despotism, now hail that dawning with joy and gratitude unutterable; and in faith and hope we see the meridian glory of the sun to the zenith.

It is a pleasant task to trace the tokens of our nation's progress during the past year. Some of the most unmistakable of these are found in the enactments of Congress. On the 25th of February, 1862, the House of Representatives passed, by a vote of eighty-three years against forty-two nays, a bill forbidding any person connected with the army or navy, on penalty of dismission from the service, to aid in the capture of fugitive slaves in their service; and on the 19th of March following, the bill was passed in the Senate, by a vote of twenty-nine years against nine nays. Though, regarded abstractly, this prohibition on the part of a government fighting for its life, appears trivial and ineffectual, yet, as slaveholding rebels, seems less remarkable than the necessity for its utterance; when viewed in connection with the past history of our nation, and the long existing relations between the North and South, it is evidence of a great moral triumph in the morning papers. We have reported the proceedings of the Anti-Slavery Society and of the Loyal Woman's League, as being the only anniversaries that had any spiciness in them. Wendell Phillips was the great lion of the Abolitionists, and he actually raised a treason in five minutes than Vallandigham could descant in as many hours. Why Copperhead should be sent to Dixie or the Dry Tortugas, and Silver Tongue permitted to crucify President Lincoln and his entire Cabinet with impunity, is a question to which we should like a satisfactory answer. They ought certainly to be paired off, chained together by the ankles; and if that punishment would not bring Vallandigham to every repentance it would be only because he is incorrigible.

As to the Women's Convention, that which was originally designed for a most patriotic and praiseworthy motive has been distorted into an atheistical, revolutionary woman's rights movement, under the leadership of Lucy Stone, Susan B. Anthony and Ernestine L. Rose. At their meeting in the Church of the Puritans one of the progressive spirits boasted that she belonged to no sect or creed, political, religious or moral, and another questioned the existence of a divinity.

It is of such elements that our May anniversaries are largely compounded. All the swivelling hypocrites, fanatics and sentimentalists from New York and New England congregate here at this time, and find a theatre for the recital of their fables, the spouting of their treason and the exhibition of their notics. Great is New York.

From The New York Observer.

It is painful to notice the increased and excited spirit of vituperation and ultra fanaticism which pervaded the abolition speeches at several meetings. We say it is painful, because at such a time as this when the nation is rent with intestine war, and it is of infinite importance to unite all men in the single work of restoring the Union and the Constitution, and especially when the whole country has just been called upon by the President to pray for the restoration of the nation to its former happy condition of unity and peace, it is a shame and a sin for any man to say as Mr. Beecher is reported to have said at the Anniversary of the American Home Missionary Society:

"I say boldly that rather than have the States to resume their place under the Constitution with the power of slavery in them, all just as it was before, I had rather give every child that I have; I had rather embark on a war of twenty years, with all our property and its blood; and a war of twenty years, much as its miseries would be, would be very compared with the untold wretchedness of this nation if we should come out again with slavery flourishing and rampant" (great applause).

The President of the United States, and all loyal patriots, men who love the Union and hate slavery, are anxious to see the Union restored just as it was and then to do and suffer all that is necessary to remove the curse of slavery from the land. But we record our emphatic protest against the "great applause" with which the Home Mission Society meeting received the disloyal and anti-patriotic doctrine of Mr. Beecher. We stand fast by the Constitution and the Administration that supports it, and we write him an enemy who is not praying and working to sustain the right in maintaining its integrity.

Still more disloyal was the language of Wendell Phillips at the Anti-Slavery meeting. Speaking of our government, he said:

"We and monkeys in human attire at Washington; they were determined to compromise, and the South dung back in them for eighteen months, and they were on all-fours for the temptation (applause). Sumter, West Point and rotten Whiggery should be sloughed off from the government as they sloughed off Essex and Fairfax in Cromwell's time.

* * * * * *

"He believed there never would be victory while Halleck was in command. The old proverb said a fool was better a great fool until he had learned Latin, and he thought a man was never incorrigible till he had graduated at West Point (applause). While slavery existed there was danger to the Union. Abraham Lincoln was not President of the United States—the Cabinet controlled him. The first advice to be emancipated was Lincoln (applause). If the government would not obey advice they must obey reverses."

Such infamous language as this is applauded; but scores of men have been put to death in war times for the utterance of words not half so treasonable. The man wants the government to "obey advice" (!), the advice of such men as he, and if not they must "obey reverses." Another of the editors of The Independent boldly took the ground that the black race was in all respects superior to the white race on this continent, declaring that universal amalgamation of the whites and blacks is to take place until the black becomes the dominant race by having absorbed the whites.

We make these records to note the progress of opinion among the leaders of the abolition party who now demand the destruction of the government. Their creed is fully avowed. twenty years (if necessary) of war! the annihilation of the Southern cities!! and AMALGAMATION!!!

MILITARY PROTECTION FOR BLACK SOLDIERS.

To impel the slaves to desire the reestablishment of the Union, it needs but to offer them freedom; but to insure their fidelity, energy, and general cooperation in the work, they must have military protection. In other words, we cannot expect the blacks to risk their lives in battle array for the Union, if we abandon them in case of defeat and capture to the savage vengeance of their rebellious masters, allowing them to be sold as slaves or executed as insurgent traitors. This truth is too plain to need elucidation. We know, too, by the action of the rebel Congress and the proclamation of Davis respecting the same, that the rebels will enslave or kill every black captured while in our service, unless they are deterred by the fear of stern retaliation. It has become, therefore, a vital necessity that our government should declare its purpose to require of its black soldiers the protection of the humaner laws of war, and to visit with stern retaliation every violation thereof to the injury or peril of any class or portion of its armed defenders.

The government has just published "Instructions for the Government of Armies of the United States in the Field," prepared by Prof. Francis Lieber, LL. D., and revised by a Board of Officers whereof Gen. Ethan A. Hitchcock is President, and approved by the President of the United States. These instructions are full and adequate, and seem to have been framed so as to cover every case which may arise as between the belligerents in the prosecution of wars generally, and of the present Civil War especially. They treat of Martial Law, Military Jurisdiction, Rebellion, Insurrection, Prisoners, Flags of Truce, Parole, the taking of Public and of Private Property, the Treatment of Spies, Scouts, Guerillas, Assassins, etc., and from beginning to end claim no immunities for the soldiers of a government which recognizes and owns no recognized government over those of an armed and formidable rebellion. With regard to the treatment of black soldiers, their provisions are as follows:

"41. All municipal law of the ground on which the army stands, or through which it moves, goes silent amidst the clashing of arms; silent not as regards the officers and men of the army, but silent as regards protection they owe to the inhabitants. Modern times have softened much the severity of martial law, which, properly speaking, has only force for its basis, and knows no other law than the will of the commander. The laws of war do not cease when a district or country is occupied or invaded. Crimes committed in the occupied district, for centuries past have been held free and acknowledged free by the judicial decisions of European countries, even though the municipal law of the country in which the slave had taken refuge acknowledged slavery within its own dominions.

"43. Therefore, in a war between the United States and a belligerent which admits of slavery, if a person held in bondage by that belligerent be captured by or comes as a fugitive under the protection of the military forces of the United States, such person is immediately entitled to the rights and privileges of a freeman. To return such person into slavery would be against the laws of war as now waged; and neither the United States, nor any officer under their authority, can enslave any human being. Moreover, a person who has once, by the laws of war, been under the shield of the law of nations, and the former owner or State can have, by the law of post-limine, no belligerent lien or claim to his labor.

"47. So soon as a man is armed by a sovereign government and mustered into its military service, he is a belligerent; his killing, wounding, or other warlike acts, are no individual crimes or offenses. No belligerent has a right to declare that enemies, taken in actual war, are in a peculiar condition, when properly organized as soldiers, will not be treated by him as public enemies.

"48. The laws of war know of no distinction of color; and if an enemy of the United States should enslave and sell any captured persons of their army it would be a case for the retaliatory power of the United States to complaint. The United States cannot retaliate by enslavement; therefore death must be the retaliation for this crime against the law of nations."

This is as it should be, and seems to cover the ground, provided it is to be not only distinctly proclaimed, but sternly enforced. I do not know that what is here recommended is not in accordance with Laws of War governing the employment as soldiers by one belligerent of persons who have been held as slaves by the other has in any case been violated with impunity by the rebels; yet there have been black regiments in Louisiana, in the Carolinas and South Carolina for months, of whom I have not heard that a single one, having been captured by the rebels, has ever been exchanged or returned by them. Perhaps no such regiment has yet been captured, though that is barely possible. But it is probable that at the time that quite a number of blacks, who were with our forces at Harper's Ferry when that post was so shamefully surrendered to Stonewall Jackson last fall, were captured by the rebels, and have not since been heard from on our side of the lines, it is understood that a number of blacks, who, under the protection of a flag of truce, went down to Bull Run to carry relief to our wounded soldiers after the disastrous fight of that day, were also captured and seized by the rebels and buried off into bondage. Let us hope that there has been some mistake in the premises, and that the instinctive, all but universal loyalty of the blacks to the Union cause is to be rewarded by the clear and emphatic announcement and enforcement of a policy which will insure to so many of them as may be captured by the enemy while serving as the same treatment that is accorded to whites similarly employed, so that thousands after thousands may be induced to enlist in our black regiments, and thus replenish the thinned ranks of the defenders of our Union. Where Justice and Policy walk so manifestly hand in hand, it cannot be that Folly and Prejudice and stupid Pride will be suffered to ignore or overbear them.—Horace Greeley, in The Independent.

ROMAN CATHOLICS AND LIBERTY.

From The Evening Post

WHILE a few Roman Catholics in New York, like the Abbe McMasters and Mr. Mullaly, editor of The Metropolitan Record, adhere to the cause of the rebels, it is gratifying to know that the best and most respectable priests in that Church, as well as the great mass of the laity, are true to the Union and to the cause of human freedom. In this they are indeed only following the traditions of their Church, which has always been opposed to the institution of slavery.

In a recent letter Gen. Rosecrans commends the course of the editor of the Cincinnati Telegraph, the leading Roman Catholic journal of the West, which has, as our readers know, taken strong ground in favor of liberty and against slavery. Such men as Gen. Rosecrans, the Rev. E. V. Farrell and Bishop Smyth of Iowa are an honor to their Church. Concerning the latter, who is one of the staunchest loyal men in the West, we recently printed a paragraph from a Dubuque paper. A resident of the place has since then called upon us and made us acquainted with some of the worthy Bishop's personal traits.

It appears that Dubuque is a nest of copperheads, and that the Roman Catholic Church, which there includes some of the most influential people, has in her bosom a number of violent sympathizers with treason. It is, perhaps, enough to say that Mr. Mahoney, who has lately pleased his enemy by writing whatever country they may exist, who infringe on those rights. You perceive that in the struggle now going on in America an attempt is being made to establish a government on the destruction of the rights of labor—a government of physical power to take away the rights of labor. It is a question above all local right, it is a general principle, and therefore, though taking place in a foreign country, you have a right to express your opinion thereon [hear]. Gentlemen, I accept the trust imposed upon me with great pleasure, the more that as you have taken advantage of the occasion to speak on the question of war. I agree generally with your views on the subject. But with two nations of the same race, of the same high spirit, both feeling a natural jealousy in their superiority on the seas, I think it almost impossible, under existing circumstances, to prevent some things springing up that might occasion a collision. I therefore concur with you, gentlemen, as to the necessity for great forbearance being exhibited by both countries and governments in construing the actions of each other. I trust that in spite of all that has occurred there is in the government of each country a sufficient sense of responsibility which will induce them to maintain friendly relations with each other. The great nations rally be a feeling of pride—of fear, lest one nation should appear to refrain from properly resenting what it might deem to be an offence from the other; and in this feeling I feel great confidence. I feel confident, however, that if the two peoples and the two governments would speak together in the same sense, in the same frank and unreserved tones as you have spoken to me this evening, all fear of any collision would be at an end [hear]. I can assure you that notwithstanding the speeches of some of my countrymen, notwithstanding the writings in some of the American journals, there is no nation under the sun to which England entertains a greater regard than England, and if the real sentiments of the people of each country can be clearly established to each other, I shall have no fear of their coming into collision [hear, hear]. I believe, gentlemen, you have taken the right course to produce this desirable understanding, and I confess it will be a great pleasure to me to transmitting your address to President Lincoln [cheers].

The deputation having thanked Mr. Adams for his courteous reception, and Mr. Bright for his kindness in attending, then retired.

THE LABOR QUESTION IN THE WEST.

From The Evening Post.

"FIVE thousand negroes wanted!" exclaims the St. Paul Press, one of the leading journals of Minnesota, and goes on to explain that the farmers of that rich young State are "suffering serious inconveniences from the great deficiency of labor."

"This deficiency has been felt in all departments of business, but in no branch of industry has it been felt more keenly from this cause than agriculture. Since the absorption of so many of the laboring class in the army, many of our farmers have found it impossible to reap the harvest in time, and under tillage from the sheer want of hands to put in their usual crops, and even then much of the grain has gone to waste from the deficiency of help in the harvest time. Some of our intelligent farmers have already begun to look to the contraband for aid in this emergency, and if a satisfactory repugnance to a Northern climate can be overcome, which we think very doubtful indeed, an importation of five or ten thousand negroes might be made with very great advantage to the State."

Gen. Sibley has sent to St. Louis for between three and four hundred blacks, to serve as teamsters, cooks, etc., in the army which is to proceed against the Indians; and as the Minnesotians have a very immediate interest in the success of that army, they will be glad to have its strength increased even by such accessions.

In the meantime Mr. Seward would do well to renew his efforts to inform the laboring classes of Europe, by our consuls and other officers abroad, that there is opportunity in America for many millions of strong arms; that wages of labor have risen and are rising; that industry is united together in the whole grain crop of the present year, which promises to be very large, our farmers need much help; and that no honest, law-abiding and industrious man can fail now to earn bread for himself and his family in the West; while all such may hope, by a few years of steady industry to acquire for themselves homes and homesteads of their own in the land.

Already emigrants are crowding to our shores; but there is room for still more. If any man in Europe is starving and would like work, let him be sent hither. It is a pleasant reflection that, if the crime of the slaveholding cotton-planters has brought severe suffering on many millions of the working men of Europe, the free States which are defending the Union at the same time offer homes to those made homeless, work to those made idle, and bread to those who are starving through the wicked acts of the rebellious slaveholders.

The International Exhibition at Hamburg, to be opened in July, will bring together these men from all the German States, and it would be well if our State and government agents would set forth to these delegates and visitors the great advantages offered now to industrious poor men, by settlement in the Western States. It is an occasion which we ought not to lose, and we have no doubt some of the States are ready to profit by it. Ohio has already an emissary in Europe to publish the advantages of settlement in that State. Other Western States should follow in the same course.

AMERICAN SLAVERY.

ADDRESS OF FRENCH PROTESTANT PASTORS.

The following address to ministers of the Gospel in Great Britain was sent from Paris through the Rev. Dr. Massie. The distinguished Protestant pastors whose names are at the foot attest that it has been signed by 689 Protestant ministers of France. Since the 12th of February, we have, we believe, we understand, been sent in, raising the total to the large number of 750:

To the ministers and pastors of all evangelical denominations in Great Britain.

PARIS, Friday, February 12th, 1863.

HONORED AND BELOVED BRETHREN IN THE LORD: It is the glory of England to have given to the world the example of abolishing first the slave trade, and then slavery. It is her glory to have continued for the last sixty years the work of emancipation, not only the slave trade and slavery at the cost, it is asserted, of fifty million of pounds sterling. And it is, under God, chiefly to her religious men, to her Clarksons, her Wilberforces, her Buxtons, to her missionaries and to her Christian women, that, we hope, will not the sons and successors of these great Christians complete their work, by urging their country to declare itself openly for the true cause of the liberation of the slave in the terrible struggle which is at present in progress between the United States of America?

No more revolting spectacle has ever been set before the civilized world, than a Confederacy consisting mainly of Protestants forming itself, and demanding independence in the nineteenth century of the Christian era, with a professed design of maintaining and propagating slavery; a Confederacy which lays down, as the corner-stone of its Constitution, the system of slavery as it exists at present in the Southern States—a system which may be defined briefly as the right to treat men like cattle, and to commit adultery and murder with impunity. Setting aside all political considerations, can any Christian heart fail to be stirred to indignation at hearing the chief of that Confederacy answering a decree of emancipation by an implied threat of extermination?

The triumph of such a cause would put back the progress of Christian civilization and of humanity a whole century. It would make angels weep in heaven, and demons rejoice in hell. It would enable the friends of the slave trade and of slavery in all lands to hold up their heads, ever ready as they are to reappear at the first signal, in Asia, in Africa, and even in the great cities of Europe. It would give a fatal blow to the work of evangelical missions. And what a frightful responsibility would rest on the Church which should remain the silent spectator of such a triumph!

We are in a peaceable means of hastening the end of the war, and of rendering its issue such as is desired by all the friends of humanity, is it not that the sincere Christians of Europe should give to the cause of emancipation a powerful impulse, which would be felt even on those who fight for the right of suppressing the slaves no hope of ever seeing those Christians give them the hand of fellowship?

Ministers and pastors of all the Evangelical denominations of England, Scotland and Ireland, it is here we need your assistance. Take the lead, and let us call forth a great and peaceful manifestation of sympathy for the colored race so long oppressed and debased by Christian nations. Let us thus discourage the partisans of slavery. Let us strengthen and encourage those who wish to abolish it, at the same time disposing them to listen to our suggestions. It is in free England that such manifestations can be powerful. What may we not hope for if, throughout Great Britain, the voice of all the ministers of the crucified Savior—and in France, our voice echoing theirs—pray and plead that such a scene may no longer be in the United States a colored man that is not free and equal with the whites?

May God grant it, and may his blessing rest alike on Great Britain and the United States, in Christ, the true Liberator!

* * * * * *

The following reply was adopted by a conference of ministers, held in London, and presided over by the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel:

"Dear brethren, the names are undersigned, share in your views, rejoice in your zeal, and are thankful for your exhortations. It is honorable to France, and to French Protestantism, that you so heartily wish the destruction of the slave system, which makes 4,000,000 negroes wretched; which debases their masters; which has been a vast calamity to a great Protestant nation, and which dishonors Christ, by whose professed servants it is upheld. We ourselves, we feel a deep compassion for the slaves, who are a part of the human family; we wish by all means in our power to discourage those who are plotting to perpetuate their degradation; and we wish success to all just and humane measures for their deliverance. With these sentiments we beg to assure you that, although we have so nobly taken the lead, we shall do what we can to accomplish those benevolent objects to which you invite our attention. Accept our fraternal wishes that you may enjoy the favor and blessing of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

We learn from the London Star that upward of 1,500 signatures to this reply, and a general cooperation by the London and Manchester Emancipation Societies and that large numbers continue to be received every day. The signatures include many clergymen of the Church of England and Scotland, and Non-conformist ministers of every denomination.

MILITARY PROTECTION FOR BLACK SOLDIERS.

To impel the slaves to desire the reestablishment of the Union, it needs but to offer them freedom; but to insure their fidelity, energy, and general cooperation in the work, they must have military protection. In other words, we cannot expect the blacks to risk their lives in battle array for the Union, if we abandon them in case of defeat and capture to the savage vengeance of their rebellious masters, allowing them to be sold as slaves or executed as insurgent traitors. This truth is too plain to need elucidation. We know, too, by the action of the rebel Congress and the proclamation of Davis respecting the same, that the rebels will enslave or kill every black captured while in our service, unless they are deterred by the fear of stern retaliation. It has become, therefore, a vital necessity that our government should declare its purpose to require of its black soldiers the protection of the humaner laws of war, and to visit with stern retaliation every violation thereof to the injury or peril of any class or portion of its armed defenders.

The government has just published "Instructions for the Government of Armies of the United States in the Field," prepared by Prof. Francis Lieber, LL. D., and revised by a Board of Officers whereof Gen. Ethan A. Hitchcock is President, and approved by the President of the United States. These instructions are full and adequate, and seem to have been framed so as to cover every case which may arise as between the belligerents in the prosecution of wars generally, and of the present Civil War especially. They treat of Martial Law, Military Jurisdiction, Rebellion, Insurrection, Prisoners, Flags of Truce, Parole, the taking of Public and of Private Property, the Treatment of Spies, Scouts, Guerillas, Assassins, etc., and from beginning to end claim no immunities for the soldiers of a government which recognizes and owns no recognized government over those of an armed and formidable rebellion. With regard to the treatment of black soldiers, their provisions are as follows:

"41. All municipal law of the ground on which the army stands, or through which it moves, goes silent amidst the clashing of arms; silent not as regards the officers and men of the army, but silent as regards protection they owe to the inhabitants. Modern times have softened much the severity of martial law, which, properly speaking, has only force for its basis, and knows no other law than the will of the commander. The laws of war do not cease when a district or country is occupied or invaded. Crimes committed in the occupied district, for centuries past have been held free and acknowledged free by the judicial decisions of European countries, even though the municipal law of the country in which the slave had taken refuge acknowledged slavery within its own dominions.

"43. Therefore, in a war between the United States and a belligerent which admits of slavery, if a person held in bondage by that belligerent be captured by or comes as a fugitive under the protection of the military forces of the United States, such person is immediately entitled to the rights and privileges of a freeman. To return such person into slavery would be against the laws of war as now waged; and neither the United States, nor any officer under their authority, can enslave any human being. Moreover, a person who has once, by the laws of war, been under the shield of the law of nations, and the former owner or State can have, by the law of post-limine, no belligerent lien or claim to his labor.

"57. So soon as a man is armed by a sovereign government and mustered into its military service, he is a belligerent; his killing, wounding, or other warlike acts, are no individual crimes or offenses. No belligerent has a right to declare that enemies, taken in actual war, are in a peculiar condition, when properly organized as soldiers, will not be treated by him as public enemies.

"58. The laws of war know of no distinction of color; and if an enemy of the United States should enslave and sell any captured persons of their army it would be a case for the retaliatory power of the United States to complaint. The United States cannot retaliate by enslavement; therefore death must be the retaliation for this crime against the law of nations."

This is as it should be, and seems to cover the ground, provided it is to be not only distinctly proclaimed, but sternly enforced. I do not know that what is here recommended is not in accordance with Laws of War governing the employment as soldiers by one belligerent of persons who have been held as slaves by the other has in any case been violated with impunity by the rebels; yet there have been black regiments in Louisiana, in the Carolinas and South Carolina for months, of whom I have not heard that a single one, having been captured by the rebels, has ever been exchanged or returned by them. Perhaps no such regiment has yet been captured, though that is barely possible. But it is probable that at the time that quite a number of blacks, who were with our forces at Harper's Ferry when that post was so shamefully surrendered to Stonewall Jackson last fall, were captured by the rebels, and have not since been heard from on our side of the lines, it is understood that a number of blacks, who, under the protection of a flag of truce, went down to Bull Run to carry relief to our wounded soldiers after the disastrous fight of that day, were also captured and seized by the rebels and buried off into bondage. Let us hope that there has been some mistake in the premises, and that the instinctive, all but universal loyalty of the blacks to the Union cause is to be rewarded by the clear and emphatic announcement and enforcement of a policy which will insure to so many of them as may be captured by the enemy while serving as the same treatment that is accorded to whites similarly employed, so that thousands after thousands may be induced to enlist in our black regiments, and thus replenish the thinned ranks of the defenders of our Union. Where Justice and Policy walk so manifestly hand in hand, it cannot be that Folly and Prejudice and stupid Pride will be suffered to ignore or overbear them.—Horace Greeley, in The Independent.

ROMAN CATHOLICS AND LIBERTY.

From The Evening Post

WHILE a few Roman Catholics in New York, like the Abbe McMasters and Mr. Mullaly, editor of The Metropolitan Record, adhere to the cause of the rebels, it is gratifying to know that the best and most respectable priests in that Church, as well as the great mass of the laity, are true to the Union and to the cause of human freedom. In this they are indeed only following the traditions of their Church, which has always been opposed to the institution of slavery.

In a recent letter Gen. Rosecrans commends the course of the editor of the Cincinnati Telegraph, the leading Roman Catholic journal of the West, which has, as our readers know, taken strong ground in favor of liberty and against slavery. Such men as Gen. Rosecrans, the Rev. E. V. Farrell and Bishop Smyth of Iowa are an honor to their Church. Concerning the latter, who is one of the staunchest loyal men in the West, we recently printed a paragraph from a Dubuque paper. A resident of the place has since then called upon us and made us acquainted with some of the worthy Bishop's personal traits.

It appears that Dubuque is a nest of copperheads, and that the Roman Catholic Church, which there includes some of the most influential people, has in her bosom a number of violent sympathizers with treason. It is, perhaps, enough to say that Mr. Mahoney, who has lately pleased his enemy by writing a book, is one of the leaders on the ticket. Gen. C. B. Jones, formerly United States Minister to Bogota, is also of that ilk. It was understood in Dalonque that a society was forming with the design of making active resistance to the draft. The Bishop heard of the movement and knew that the society was not only disloyal to the secular law, but, sufficiently known, the Roman Catholic Church will tolerate no secret societies, and he therefore informed his congregation on a certain Sunday morning that he would excommunicate any and all who should join the obnoxious institution. His announcement was received with blank faces by the faithful, and with undissembled rage by the copperheads outside the pale of the Church. But the effect was to kill the movement dead, so far as the Roman Catholic population were concerned.

Ever since the firing of the first gun Bishop Smyth has kept the national flag flying on his house, and his church, and both edifices are now included beneath its folds. He is fearless and uncompromising in his loyalty, neither obtrusive nor too belligerent, but never covering personal timidity with the convenient cloak of the duties of his profession. His influence for good is very great, and against his private character and notoriety of heart no word is ever spoken.

LETTER FROM MAJ.-GEN. ROSECRANS.

For some weeks past a controversy has been going on between The Catholic Telegraph of Cincinnati, edited by the Very Rev. E. Purcell, brother of the distinguished Archbishop of Cincinnati, and a prominent Catholic journal of that city. The learned editor of The Telegraph insists and proves that the Catholic Church and slavery have never got along well together; that the Church abolished that peculiar institution wherever she came in contact with it, and that, up only in America that Catholics have ever been found advocating slavery. The controversy has called forth the following letter from Maj.-Gen. Rosecrans, which appears in a late issue of The Telegraph. "The editor says: "He (Rosecrans) has never been an Abolitionist, and has, like ourselves, stood up for the Democracy."

MCCOMB'S, CO., Ap. 12, 1863.

MY DEAR FATHER ENWARD.—I fear this will be the last letter I wrote you, but I cry will draw very much consolation from its contents. I saw in your paper the splendid stand you took in The Telegraph against slavery, with its horrors, barbarities, and base immoralities. Slavery is proof, nothing else so much so, that I am happy to learn the fact fully, you should pay us a visit. There is not a negro in the South who does not know he is free. Slavery is dead, they have quitted on the plantations, and refuse to work for any one but themselves. They have sown little crops of their own, and the masters have ceased to attempt to control over them.

As an indication, I will cite a strong case. The lady of the house where I am stay, I attempted to punish one of her negro women this morning. I had to step in to save the mistress from being badly used up, as the latter was belaboring her with the stick intended for her own punishment. "E. ono dice omnes." It is needless for me to say that I against every negro rebellion, and I am happy to learn, The Telegraph. Your course is that of the prudent navigator, who, watching the black speck on the horizon, sees it expand into a portentous storm, and calls up his crew to take in sail and prepare for a contest with the elements. The storm will pass very soon and the ship will rise from under full sail, while those who took not heed will be scattered by the gale.

I am hard at hand with you in this cause. Slavery is doomed, and those who would row against it will be held up in a very short time to public contempt and execration. No statesman will vindicate it, no friend of human progress will stretch forth a hand to break its fall, no love of freedom manly and religious will grieve for its overthrow. I have lived long enough in the South to see its workings, its disgusting features, debasing the human mind, its offensive nature, warring with religion, and patronizing vice and immorality. Almighty God has certainly ordained its destruction in this country, where it has been more offensive and immoral than in any other, and until it is utterly extinct, this war cannot, from the nature of things, end. I am in favor of a cessation of hostilities as early a day as possible; therefore, I am in favor of the President's proclamation. This should be made the basis of action. Slavery, labor, and when slavery no longer blights its borders we may expect to see the church and the school-house take the place of the slave-pen and market."

National Anti-Slavery Standard.

WITHOUT CONCEALMENT—WITHOUT COMPROMISE.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1863.

CORRESPONDENTS will greatly oblige us by a careful observance of the following directions, viz.:

Letters enclosing matter for publication, or relating in any way to the editorial conduct of the paper, should be addressed, "EDITOR OF THE ANTI-SLAVERY STANDARD, No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK."

Letters enclosing subscriptions, or relating in any way to the business of the office, should be addressed, "PUBLISHER OF THE ANTI-SLAVERY STANDARD, No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK."

CONSERVATISM AND RADICALISM.

MANY is the word which, as Bardolph says of the word accommodate, "was a good word enough till it was ill-sorted." And by bad company a word of respectable lineage and behavior gets into, it often becomes utterly perverted from its first innocence and entirely corrupted and debauched. It is so with both the words standing at the head of this article. Conservatism properly means the preservation of what is good and in danger of being destroyed, and Radicalism intends the thorough reform of what is mischievous and ought to be done away with altogether. By degrees they have changed places in the popular vocabulary of the day, until Conservatism stands for the conservation of whatever is worst in our institutions, and especially of slavery and the control of slaveholders over the country, while Radicalism is understood as striking a blow at the very root of slavery and of the Oligarchy resting upon it, the dark shade of which has always been on our affairs, public and private, up to two years ago. Properly speaking, therefore, those denounced as Radicals are the true Conservatives, who are striving to maintain whatever makes a government worth living under, and the laws which shall maintain the equal rights of all men, while they who hold themselves up as Conservatives are the men who are laying the axe at the root of the Social System and endeavoring to destroy it radically by making it rest on violations of the Divine laws. When this is fully understood, the names may be allowed to stand as they are. But, until they are received accurately into the general mind, the confusion of terms does mischief by causing confusion of ideas. When it is known that a Radical is one who believes in a Republic, in which the rights of all its members are equally respected and equal opportunities given to all for prosperity and advancement, and that a Conservative is a believer in an Aristocracy resting on the denial of the most important rights to a large majority of the people, for the advantage, wealth and dominion of a very few, when this is known the names by which they are called is entirely immaterial.

In its bad sense Radicalism is identical with what is called Conservatism in this country. Virtuous Radicalism is understood to desire the levelling of all conditions of life and to foment class jealousies for the purpose of setting the poor against the rich. For this end they represent to the poor that there is a natural antagonism between them and the rich; that Labor and Capital are natural enemies, and that what hurts the one is good for the other. Now this is precisely what the Copperhead who call themselves Conservatives are all the time busy in attempting to do. They try to make the ignorant classes of society believe that this war, waged against treason for the life of the nation, is really carried on for the benefit of contractors and the advantage of the rich. They appeal to the lowest and worst passions of the populace by telling them that this war is one to raise the negro on the ruin of the white man, and that its natural and necessary course will be to overrun the free States with black labor, so as to reduce the rate of wages to the lowest point. And in States where these wretches have had a preponderance, chiefly through the absence of the Republicans in the army, laws have been made forbidding the entrance of negroes into their territory and even exiling those who had already acquired a domicile there. A policy—or rather an impolicy—sure to bring its own punishment with it when the fields call aloud for labor to gather in their abundance. And happy will it be if the punishment works a cure. And to carry out their levelling plans, in the hopes of a reward of power or profit, under the Slave Oligarchy they hope to bring back again, they call to their aid everything that is vile in the shape of ruffianism and vice. And wealthy and educated men are found to place themselves at the head of such movements, organized for such purposes, through passion, prejudice or selfish schemes of personal or partizan aggrandizement.

And what is the condition of things which these self-styled Conservatives wish to restore and maintain? One in which Virginia had been reduced to lay far behind New York in the van of population and wealth, South Carolina behind Massachusetts and Delaware behind Rhode Island, with every advantage on their side at the start in 1790. A state of things which threw all commerce into the hands of the North, and all manufactures, with every advantage on their side of rivers and harbors. One which had brought the wolf back to the oldest settlements of the continent. One which made internal improvements all but impossible. And, which was worse, one that prevented intelligence and education even of the favored race, and made even the governing few a semi-civilized, ill-educated, suspicious, revengeful, treacherous and cruel class. And all this because their social system was built up on the capitalizing of labor and the consequent denial of the natural rights of the laborer. Hence the imperfect results of the labor of the country and the consequent insufficient accumulation of capital for the development of its resources. Hence, also, the degradation of the poor whites and the scarcely less dreadful degradation of the property-holders from the unbridled license given to all the worst passions of their nature. And all this class of persons, thus demoralized and unfit to govern themselves, our special Conservatives would make the dictators of the laws and policy of the nation—nay, have made them such for seventy years—for the hope of the crumbs to fall from their masters' table! Happily, the conservation of such a system was inherently impossible. Nothing could hinder its final ruin, though it might have been delayed had it not been for the greedy ambition of the slaveholding leaders. And we trust that its ruin will have been too complete to permit of its rehabilitation, or even to allow of the alternative hope of our Conservatives, that the slaveholders may be allowed to cover up their own ruin in that of the whole nation.

What, on the other hand, is the heart's desire and prayer of those intended to be stigmatized as Radicals? Simply, the restoration of the operation of the laws of God to the governing of man. To give every man a right to his own body, and every right flowing from that primary right of all. To open the Southern country to the action of the laws of labor and capital and of supply and demand. To educate all classes, to give a career to every one who can achieve it, to make the acquisition of property and an improvement in condition possible to all, to open roads and whiten rivers with commerce, to make travel and residence safe for all comers, to secure the earnings of labor and the accumulations of capital, and thus to multiply the wealth, virtue, comfort and happiness of all classes a thousandfold. And, as the South is made the safe abode of labor and commerce, the North will share in every blessing thus created. The wealth of the nation would be indefinitely increased. The cost of the war that shall gain these good things would be but as the light dust of the balance compared with what would be gained by it. The only cause of sectional division would be done away with, and the Republic would be the most imperial polity on the face of the globe. The enmity its enemies strive to excite between labor and capital would disappear in the light of greater intelligence. Indeed, it has scarcely any practical existence where the laws of political economy are allowed fair play, because of the beneficent contradiction of actual results to crude speculation. Science and genius, stimulating capital and labor, will develop this continent to a degree beyond the wildest dreams of projectors. Social safety, domestic peace, respect abroad, a due influence in the affairs of the world, national wealth, greatness and glory are the normal and natural results of the true Republic which the Radicals would establish out of what is left of the old Slaveddriving Oligarchy which held us back so long from all these things. Whether of the two will ye choose, Conservatism or Radicalism? A united or a divided country? One destiny or twain?

THE STANDARD FOR THE SOLDIERS.

A GENEROUS DONATION.

We take great pleasure in laying before our readers the following letter:

NEW YORK, May 19th, 1863.

OLIVER JOHNSON, ESQ., Editor of the Anti-Slavery Standard.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of the Lecture Committee of the Sixteenth Ward Republican Association of the City of New York, I beg leave to tender you, as a donation, in aid of your valuable journal, the sum of $225 35, the same being the net proceeds of a lecture delivered by WENDELL PHILLIPS, Esq., in the Cooper Institute, on Monday evening, May 11th, 1863, under the auspices of the aforesaid Committee.

Accept this simple tribute of esteem for the fearlessness and honesty of purpose your journal has always displayed in the cause of justice and humanity.

Yours truly, etc., H. C. PARKE,
Chairman Lecture Committee, 197 Ninth Avenue.

We cannot help thinking that this donation does credit to the sagacity and good sense of the Lecture Committee of the Sixteenth Ward Republican Association. They have the sense to perceive that the success and even the life of the Republican party depends upon its fidelity to anti-slavery principles, and therefore they have set themselves to the task of enlightening the masses on the subject. Instead of shrinking, like too many of their associates, from being called Abolitionists, they are willing, if necessary, to incur all the odium attached to that name.

The American Anti-Slavery Society, having learned that the proceeds of Mr. Phillips's lecture would be thus placed at its disposal, passed a special vote, at the late annual meeting, to appropriate the money to the circulation of THE STANDARD among the soldiers. In order to carry this object into effect, we propose to open at this office placing thereon the names of such officers and privates in the army as our friends in different parts of the country may furnish, and sending the paper to their address for a longer or shorter period, in the proportion that the number of the names may bear to the sum thus placed at our disposal.

A SOLDIERS' LIST,

We desire to send the paper only to such persons as will be likely to read it themselves, and circulate it among their fellow-soldiers. To send it indiscriminately, without such a guaranty, would be to waste a large portion of the fund.

Probably every one of our subscribers knows some officer or soldier to whom THE STANDARD would be welcome. We invite them to send us the name and the address of such, with the understanding that in so doing they obligate themselves to write to the persons whose names they thus send, explaining to them how the paper happens to be sent, and asking them to read and circulate it.

We particular in giving the exact name and address of the soldiers, that there may be no unnecessary waste.

We shall begin with printing for this purpose one hundred extra copies, and shall enlarge the number as occasion may arise.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS.—Aaron M. Powell, writing from Ghent, May 25, says:

"I have just returned from Pittsfield, Mass., where I had a very good hearing yesterday, from about equal proportions of white and colored citizens. Rev. Samuel Harrison (colored), pastor of the Second Congregational church in Pittsfield, is a candidate for the Chaplaincy of the 55th Massachusetts (colored) regiment. He is an intelligent, good man. Though Pittsfield is in the old Bay State, it is so near Eastern New York as not to be very thoroughly educated in anti-slavery. On Saturday evening I was a guest at the American Hotel, with at too Vallandigham's arrest was the subject of conversation between two respectable, intelligent-looking gentlemen near me. One thought the arrest too bad, but if Wendell Phillips had been included and likewise sent South, he should be reconciled. The other concluded on the whole that Mr. Phillips was needed in the North to keep up the tone of public morality. They passed next to the theme of George Garrison's enlistment, and commission as Lieutenant, in the Massachusetts 55th. The one most Copperhead-ish thought this son of Lloyd Garrison's was the first one of the crazy ones among the Abolitionists who had enlisted; supposed he couldn't get any commission in a white regiment, that he wouldn't go as a private, and so had concluded to go with the niggers! So, you see, even Massachusetts, or at any rate the western portion of it, is not wholly civilized and enlightened."

THE DECADE MEETING.

THE completion of the thirtieth year and third Decade of the American Anti-Slavery Society's existence is to be celebrated by a meeting of its friends, held on the 3d and 4th of December next, in the city of Philadelphia. We are desired to call attention to this fact, and as the easiest and best way in which we can do so, we print the resolution adopted on the subject, with the remarks made on the occasion by the gentleman who offered it:

MR. MCKIM reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That in accordance with usage and from reasons of obvious fitness, it is proper that the completion of a quarter decade of the Society's existence should be marked by a special public meeting devoted to a general review and survey of the cause, and therefore that this Society, when it adjourns on this occasion, will adjourn to meet in the city of Philadelphia on the 3d day of December next, and there to celebrate in an appropriate manner the thirtieth—and we would fain hope the final—anniversary of its formation.

Mr. McKim said he offered this resolution at the instance of the Executive Committee of the Pennsylvania Anti-Slavery Society. It was in effect an invitation from the friends of the cause in Philadelphia to hold their third Decade meeting in that city. Usage and fitness alike suggested the propriety of this measure. The American Society had been founded in the city of Philadelphia. The completion of its first and second Decades had been celebrated by meetings held there. The first decade meeting, it would be remembered, was a stormy one. It was the first public demonstration of the existence of organized opposition, and the second was not materially different in this respect; but the next—that contemplated in this resolution, to be held on the 3d and 4th of December next—would be held under different auspices, and he was sure would be regarded by the people of Philadelphia with different feelings. Public sentiment had in that city, as elsewhere, undergone a radical change, and he was confident that a Convention of the kind proposed would be well received.

The last clause of the resolution expresses a hope which Mr. McKim thought was quite generally entertained, and which, in his own mind, was quite sanguine. A hope—not a clear conviction. I cannot say that I believe our work will be so near completion by the end of December that we shall be at liberty at that time to disband; but I think we shall be within sight of our goal; that by that time we shall have gained enough to enable us as a Society to say something definite and conclusive on the subject. While I would not be in haste with an official utterance upon this point, I would not needlessly delay such an utterance. While I would not have the Society disband a day before its time, I should be equally unwilling to have it live a day after its existence had ceased to be a necessity. I trust that when our organization shall have completed its work, it will dissolve, of purpose and with dignity. Let it outlive its usefulness, lingering on a miserable existence and dying of the dry rot. Don't let it imitate other so-called benevolent societies, whose existence seems to be perpetuated for no visible purpose but that of paying the salaries of their Secretaries or other officials.

Mr. President, this Society—thirty years ago—in the city of Philadelphia, came into existence with an earnestness of purpose and dignity of manner becoming the magnitude of the cause to which it was consecrated. It proclaimed to the world its sentiments, and laid down a grand outline of measures. Now, at the end of thirty years, it would be becoming in the Society to cite the world to witness that we have kept our faith—that we have adhered to our purpose—that we have turned neither to the right nor to the left; that with a singleness of eye, rarely equalled and never exceeded by any voluntary organization, we have devoted ourselves to the work we undertook to do, and that that work we have accomplished. We have "weakened a public sentiment throughout the nation opposed to the continuance of slavery in any part of the republic." This radical revolution of public sentiment, making the further continuance of slavery impossible, was the object and end of our existence. It is so written in our records. I "hope," as the resolution says, that we shall be able to declare in December that this work has been accomplished, and that thence afterwards the business of the Society can take their place with their fellow-citizens in the other duties and burdens of the republic. I do not assume to say when the Society ought to dissolve, but I do say that the dissolution of the American Anti-Slavery Society, like its birth, should be marked by a dignity of purpose and decency of manner becoming the great cause to which it was consecrated.

LETTER FROM ALFRED H. LOVE.

PHILADELPHIA, Fifth mo. 19, 1863.

To the Editor of The National Anti-Slavery Standard.

WHILE attending a few of the meetings of the American Anti-Slavery Society in New York, last week, I was deeply impressed with two facts: One the anxiety of the Abolitionists to terminate their labors, and the hope that that might be vouchsafed by the Thirtieth Anniversary occurring in December next. The other the conviction that, as slavery is in open rebellion to the government, it no longer has a legal existence, and that President Lincoln is recreant to his duty in not proclaiming immediate emancipation throughout the whole country.

I wish to say on the first point, that it is a most remarkable and beautiful example of meekness and unselfishness, to be willing and anxious to dissolve the organization the very moment it can be released from its duties. With less than a million of dollars contributed during thirty years, and with a membership at no time large, it has accomplished wonderful results. In the midst of so much creed-making and organization-loving, and so far from any one of the form without the substance, it is indeed refreshing to find one society that cares nothing for the continuance of the form after its divine objects are attained. To witness the harmony, the love, the earnestness which pervade the meetings, and see the talent and popularity of its members, one might suppose that the glory of having accomplished so much, the cordial friendships that are engendered, and the opportunities afforded for publicity, would prevent the dissolution of the Society. But it is not so, and it proves the high moral grandeur of the anti-slavery movement of the nineteenth century.

Touching the probability of the consummation of this desire, it would seem impossible to give it date or limit. The abolition of slavery is not completed by a suppression of the slaveholders' rebellion, by an enforced loyalty, or by the war power; there must be a conversion as well as a coercion to the principles of anti-slavery, otherwise the old troubles will return, and at each election there will be the same old strife for the supremacy of the Slave Power. It will be for the American Anti-Slavery Society to go on with its teachings, until a general conversion takes place. Its speakers must be heard and its publications circulated throughout all the South. This will be a life-time labor, and however it may be desired by the fathers of the cause to rest from their labors and quietly dissolve the Association, taking no credit to themselves for their great work, but allowing others to reap the rewards, and receive the praise, and however great and really Christ-like this would be, it cannot be indulged while the work yet to be done is of such magnitude.

To the second point I wish to say, that while we are unanimous that slavery is in open rebellion to the government, as it always has been in rebellion to liberty, Abolitionists must not forget that they keep the armies in the field. In other words, by their firm, bold and uncompromising stand at this hour for the consummation of the object for which they started, to wit, the abolition of slavery in this country, they stiffen and strengthen the arm of the government more than a million of soldiers. They become the corps de reserve; for governments, like men, work better if they have something to fall back upon.

Let Abolitionists, therefore, resist the demon of slavery with the same moral powers they have employed for more than a quarter of a century, and the triumphs will be miracles.

The border States are in a state of transition from slavery to anti-slavery, from disloyalty to loyalty. It is but a coarsed change, solving the problem of the Abolitionists. The unfaltering persistency of the anti-slavery cause will keep these States so agitated, and will so embolden the army, that Freedom must prevail eventually.

There never was a time in the history of the cause when more determination, united effort and consistency were demanded than at the present. Let us be equal to the emergency.

Very cordially your friend,
ALFRED H. LOVE.

NO RETREAT FROM THE PROCLAMATION.

THE friends of freedom in various parts of the country have feared that Mr. Greeley's foolish talk about the proclamation as binding the government only to maintain the freedom of the portion of the slave population which actually gives aid to the Union cause, was the foreshadowing of a purpose on the part of the Administration to make peace with the rebels, if possible, on such terms. Some weeks since, we put on record the distinct declaration of Secretary Chase, that the proclamation is "not to be disregarded or set aside in any event as a nullity, but maintained and carried out with perfect good faith to all the enfranchised." We now record the following, of the same effect, of another member of the Cabinet, Postmaster-General Blair, as delivered by him in a speech at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 20th inst.

"The President, to whom the defence of government and the command of its armies belong, has labored to carry the Republican party with which we are encompassed by hostile measures, in aid of the armed forces he has sent to the field. He would save the Union with or without slavery—would leave it in any way he could. Regardless of the United States in peace under the Constitution was again and again his overture. If there could be no assurance of this with rebels bent on subverting the Republic to establish an oligarchy of slaveholders, then the loyal friends of free government in the South he offered emancipation, with compensation and a delivrance to their enemies, which, if it was a crime, was not all only end in the extermination of the negro race or amalgamation with it. This failing, after nearly two years of expostulation and forbearance, he went to the extremity of the power conferred on him under the Constitution, the President felt himself constrained to issue that proclamation of freedom to the slaves of the South, every one of which was a stroke of war. Some of them were found fighting in their ranks—multitudes in encrutching and defending their fortifications—the greater mass in the fields as the laborers of the Confederacy, the very able-bodied white man into the field of battle against the government, who, when there, are literally fed and paid by the products of that slave labor, to secure and extend which was the prominent object of the war.

"This proclamation of the President was a reluctant advance, but, however necessary, it proceeded solely from himself, as being alone invested by the Constitution with the direction of the military power of the nation, and because it was the only thing left him in the exigency of the war which the exigency before them seemed to demand, he placed the government in a position FROM WHICH THERE WAS NO RETREAT. The proclamation was made in the face of enemy commits the nation irrevocably to make good the pledge by the UTMOST EXERTION OF POWER. It not only creates an obligation to the bondmen of Carolina in what is meant to be a reunion, it is an implied pledge of honor to the foreign powers whose conduct it is designed to influence. That measure which, in the President's judgment, was formally adopted under the Constitution and in accordance with national law to obtain the cooperation of a whole race of people, and which involves both liberty and freedom to the people, WHEN PROCLAIMED, WAS BEYOND REVOCATION BY EITHER THE CIVIL OR MILITARY AUTHORITY OF THE NATION. THE PEOPLE ONCE SLAVES IN THE REBEL STATES ARE NOW FREE, AND HAVE RECOGNIZED RIGHTS IN THE UNITED STATES. NO JUDICIAL DECISION, NO LEGISLATIVE ACTION, STATE OR NATIONAL, CAN BE ADMITTED TO RE-ENSLAVE A PEOPLE WHO ARE ASSOCIATED WITH OUR OWN DESTINIES IN THIS WAR AND PRESERVE THE GOVERNMENT, AND WHOSE MANUMISSION WAS DEEMED ESSENTIAL TO THE RESTORATION AND PRESERVATION OF THE UNION AND ITS PERMANENT PEACE."

This language, certainly, admits of but one meaning. Mr. Blair, like Mr. Chase, holds that the nation is bound to the strict letter of the proclamation; and these members of the Cabinet are far more likely than Mr. Greeley to foreshadow the policy of the President.

COLORED SOLDIERS IN INDIANA.

RICHMOND, Wayne Co., Ind., May 20, 1863.

To the Editor of The National Anti-Slavery Standard.

SEEING frequent notice in THE STANDARD of arming colored men in different localities, I thought perhaps a few items from Hoosierdom on that subject might be interesting to your readers. A few days ago we had a lecture here from that eloquent champion of freedom, John M. Langston of Oberlin, Ohio. His energetic and indefatigable co-worker, Mr. Rankin, had been several days in this vicinity, stirring up an interest among the colored people with regard to enlisting. There was a large audience of both white and colored people at the meeting. Mr. Langston made a very able and eloquent speech, setting forth the duty of the colored man to the government, in a very clear and forcible manner. He appealed to them, in the spirit of noble patriotism, not to sit idly enjoying the liberty that others are working out for them, but as becomes men who value their freedom, to grasp the sword and prove their fitness for its enjoyment by helping win it. He showed very clearly that the present time was the colored man's golden opportunity. Now is the time for him who would be free to strike the blow. He proved, by unmistakable evidence, that the government needs the strong arm of the negro to help save it, and urged him to rally to the standard of the Union and earn his freedom by fighting for it. Mr. Langston is a graduate of Oberlin and an orator of exalted talent, which he is consecrating to his country, with the devotion that shows his soul is imbued with the sacredness of the cause.

Quite a number of colored men responded to the call for volunteers, in the different settlements, in this County and others, and the prospect is that recruits of this class will be forthcoming as fast as they are wanted for service.

The sincere friends of freedom can hope for the consummation that the government has acknowledged the right of the colored man to liberty, and called him, not as a chattel, but as a man, to come and take his place in the ranks of the army. This is as it should be. As a slave he could not fight, but he will nobly unclasp his folded arms, and grasp the musket for the death struggle, knowing full well that to him it is a question of life and death; and when the day of deliverance dawns upon this nation—and it must come it must—to the black man who has manfully borne the battle for it shall be awarded the meed of honor due to his courage and devotion. The rights that he has shed his life-blood to secure for himself and his race shall be awarded. And God's ear will not listen to overtures of peace, His power will not stay the hand of war, until this guilty nation gives evidence of sincere repentance by extending complete justice to the bondmen and bondwomen of the land. M. F. THOMAS.

VALLABLE MAPS.—Our friend, W. H. Forbes, lithographer, of Boston, has sent us two excellent maps: one of Richmond and its Fortifications, including the country around for a distance of ten miles from the city; and the other of the Battle Ground of Hooker's Army, showing all the approaches from Richmond, and the scene of Stoneman's foray.

VALLANDIGHAM.—The traitorous Vallandigham arrived at Murfreesboro, Tenn., under a strong escort, on Sunday last. He was quietly taken in a carriage to the quarters of Major Wiles, Provost-Marshal-General, where he was received by Gen. Rosecrans and a number of other officers. He appeared to be fully composed, and abstained from the expression of any disagreeable sentiments. At 2 p.m., his southward journey commenced. Major Miles, with a mounted escort, started down to take him below our lines in Shelbyville. The prisoner was very cheerful, and discussed his situation indifferently, but on approaching the nearest rebel picket, commanded by Col. Webb of the 8th Alabama, some eight miles out, he became perceptibly affected. Upon taking leave of his companions, he said in substance: "I am a citizen of the United States, and loyal to them. I want you to understand that you leave here a prisoner to the Confederate authorities." To Col. Webb he made a similar remark. The former received him with a courtesy that he had read his speeches, but did not like him; that he could not receive him within the Confederate lines, but he would permit him to remain at his post until he had ascertained the pleasure of the authorities. The flag of truce party then left Vallandigham and returned. Vallandigham's speech was a very ingenious strategem by which he expected to prevent his reception by the Confederate authorities and secure himself the credit of martyrdom as a persecuted loyalist. It is probable that the enemy will refuse to receive him. He was given to understand by Gen. Rosecrans that should he arrange to return to our lines in the same way, the President's orders to carry into his original sentence into effect would be executed.

FROM SLAVERY TO FREEDOM.—On Monday last, Mrs. Harriet Jacobs (known to our readers under the pseudonyme of "Linda") came into our office a procession of dark-skinned, bright-eyed, happy-faced little girls, of various ages, from four to twelve years, whom she had piloted hither from the Contraband quarters in Alexandria, Va., all but one on their way to the "Shelter for Colored Orphans," in Providence, R. I., the managers of which have agreed to receive and train them. They were a beautiful group, and we almost envied Mrs. Jacobs the happiness she felt in leading them out of the land of slavery into a land of freedom. Looking into their faces, in which shone the light of new hopes and aspirations, slavery seemed to us more hateful than ever.

THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL LOYAL LEAGUE.

Address to the President.

To His Excellency, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States:

HAVING heard many complaints of the want of enthusiasm among Northern women in the war, we deemed it fitting to call a National Convention. From every free State, we have received the most hearty responses of LOYALTY to PATRIOTISM, and of interest in each onward step of the government as it prosecutes the idea of a true republic.

From the letters received, and the numbers assembled here to-day, we can with confidence address you in the name of the loyal women of the North.

We come not to criticize or complain. Not for ourselves or our friends do we ask redress of specific grievances, or posts of honor or emolument. We speak from no considerations of mere material gain; but, actuated by a true patriotism, in this dark hour of our nation's destiny, we come to pledge the loyal women of the republic to freedom and our country. We come to strengthen you with earnest words of sympathy and encouragement. We come to thank you for your proclamation, in which the nineteenth century seems to echo back the declaration of Seventy-six. Our fathers had a vision of the sublime idea of liberty, equality and fraternity, but they failed to climb the heights that with anointed eyes they saw. To us, their children, belongs the work to build up the living reality of what they conceived and uttered.

It is not our mission to criticize the past. Nations, like individuals, must blunder and repent. It is not wise to waste one energy in vain regret, but from each failure, rise up with renewed conscience and courage for nobler action. The follies and faults of yesterday we cast aside as the old garments we have outgrown. Born anew to freedom, slave creeds, and codes, and constitutions must now all pass away. "For men do not put new wine into old bottles, else the bottles break and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish; but they put new wine into new bottles and both are preserved."

Our special thanks are due to you, that by your proclamation two million of women are forever freed from the foulest bondage humanity ever suffered. Slavery for man is bad enough, but the refinements of cruelty must ever fall on the mothers of the oppressed race, defranded of all the rights of the family relation, and violated in the most holy instincts of their nature. A mother's life is bound up in that of her child. There centre all her hopes and ambition. But the slave mother, in her degradation, rejoices not in the future promise of her daughter, for she knows by experience what her sad fate must be. No pen can describe the unutterable agony of that mother whose past, present and future are all wrapped in darkness; who knows the crown of thorns she wears must press her daughter's brow; who knows that the wine-press she now treads, unwatched, those tender feet must tread alone. For, by the law of slavery "the child follows the condition of the mother."

By your act, the family, that great conservator of national virtue and strength, has been restored to millions of humble homes, around whose altars coming generations shall magnify and bless the name of the aid which they so early prefer, to overthrow that Slave Power which has so long ruled the North and now that you spurn its sway, is bent on crushing you? Will you not abjure that vulgar hate which has conspired with slavery against liberty in our land, and thus roll from the sepulchre, where they have buried it alive, the stone which has so long imprisoned this victim? The army of the North will thus become the angel of deliverance, rescuing the nation from the shifting sands of compromise, and refounding it upon the rock of justice.

Scores of you have been mustered out of service, many more are soon to return to your homes. A bail to you! Honor and gratitude for what you have done and suffered. Enough if you have only been fighting for the Union as it was. But is it enough, the work for which the war is now prosecuted is accomplished? Your country needs your power, soldierly endurance and accomplishment—your hard earned experience, your varied tact, and trained skill—your practiced eye and hand, in a world of need. Raw recruits cannot fill your places. Brave men your mission though far advanced, is not accomplished. You will not, cannot, abide at home, while your brethren in arms carry victory and liberty down to the Gulf.

With joy and admiration we greet you on your homeward way; while your loved ones await you coming with mingled delight and pride. When, after a brief sojourn, you go back again, conveyed by the grateful acclaim and God-speed of millions, to consummate at Freedom's call her holy work, the midnight of all time, and now so near its end, with exultant shouts, your brothers in the field will hail your coming to share with them the glory of the final victory. It will be the victory of free government, sacred rights, justice, liberty and law, over the perfidies, perjuries, lying pretenses, and frantic revelries in innocent blood of the foulest national crime that ever reeked to heaven—the overthrow of the most atrocious yet the mesuest despotism that ever tortured the groaning earth.

In behalf of the Woman's National Loyal League,
E. CADY STANTON, President.
SUSAN B. ANTHONY, Secretary.

* This Address was prepared by Mrs. Angelina Grimké Weld.

OBITUARY.

DIED, on the 21st of Fourth month, REBECCA PEIRCE, at her residence in Downingtown, Chester County, Pa., in the 68th year of her age. She was a minister much beloved, and those who were in the habit of attending our Yearly Meetings, as well as many others, will long remember with thankfulness her presence and spirit. Gentle, loving and faithful, she was lovely in her own family, and in all the relations of life, and keenly alive to all that relates to human happiness and progress. She was an earnest advocate of the cause of temperance, and of the claims of the suffering and oppressed, and walked serenely onward amid many trials, and with much reproach, bearing her testimony to the truth, which, like a bulwark, stood in the gates, and also in the pure and good, whose words and example had produced no fruitless seed. Her death was in our view "rest from their labors," but "their works follow them"; and the beauty and fragrance of their lives are a priceless gift to survivors. O, such! may truly be said, "Earth is more and Heaven is more upon her full of love because of them." A. Dewees' Intelligencer.

Personal acquaintance with the deceased enables us to bear witness to the justice of the above tribute to her worth. She was indeed a woman of rare excellence in every relation of life, and a devoted friend of the slave. Editor.

THE TRUTH IS A NETTLE!—SPEECH SUMMER in a letter to the Union meeting held at Cleveland, Ohio, put the essential truth into a few words, thus:

"If it was my privilege to speak out at occasions, would say to my fellow-citizens everywhere, that duty of Uniting for the Slave is only equal to duty of Freeding for the Slave. Duty. The two cannot be separated. They are unitedly dependent. Let the people of the North unite with nearly every man. Let freedom prevail and this people cannot cease to be united. With such a cause, there is but one side to one duty. Whoever is for the unity of the Republic must be for freedom, and whoever is for freedom must be for the unity of the Republic. It is vain to think that one can be advanced without the other. Whoever is against one is against the other, and whoever is against both is for one is unknown and that other. Let us be fervid and strong for both. This is not the time for [illegible] Abolition. We must act at once and [illegible] that the Republic may be saved while [illegible] Satan is leading forth under its banner [illegible] and this will be done.

Our Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, MAY 25, 1863.

The papers are complaining I notice, of some of Mr. Seward's diplomacy. I intend to the subject in my last letter, but The Tribune publishes a long and minute letter from the city, giving all the facts in reference to the affair of the Peterhoff steamer. The Republican of this city copies this letter and prefaces it with an intimation that Senator Sumner is the leader in this new demonstration against Mr. Seward. This is exaggeration. Mr. Sumner, I suppose, has his opinions like other men, and he expresses them when he pleases, as any other man, or any number of men, may do. He is not engaged in a conspiracy against the Secretary of State as is ridiculous as it is false. Mr. Welles, of course, feels hurt by the interference in his own business by the head of another department, and so does Mr. Bates. By law, as every one knows, the District Attorneys are under the immediate control of the Attorney-General. Yet it was Mr. Seward, and not Attorney-General Bates, who telegraphed to District Attorney Smith in New York to give the mails of the Peterhoff to the British Consul. Of course Mr. Bates dislikes the interference. Mr. Bates thinks that as Secretary of the Navy he is the person most deeply interested in this matter, yet in point of fact he was scarcely consulted at all. The charge made that Mr. Seward ordered the giving up of the mails of the Peterhoff without the knowledge of the President is untrue. The order now lies in the State Department, countersigned by Mr. Lincoln. Mr. Seward is a shrewd man, and he did not take so important a step as this without the authority of the President. He has little difficulty in coaxing the President to take his own view of matters, Mr. Seward is the State Department. Mr. Lincoln is a kind man. On the slavery question, more than once, the Secretary of State has been unable to persuade Mr. Lincoln to take his own view of what was expedient. It looks now as if in the Vallandigham case the President had listened to Gov. Tod and leading Administration men in the West, rather than to Mr. Seward. It is very well known here, that Mr. Seward is opposed to inflicting punishment upon Vallandigham. He would have him prosecuted in the courts, or under the recent enactment of Congress within twenty days of his imprisonment turned over to the Circuit Court of the United States. It is now stated that the President has interfered in the case, but has sent Vallandigham South. If he has done so, he has violated a carefully-framed enactment of the Congress of the United States. I cannot help thinking that Mr. Seward is right in this matter, and am willing to wait and see if the result of the Western elections does not justify my opinion. Mr. Stanton's foolish arrests in Ohio last Summer put the Legislature into the hands of the Copperheads in the Fall, and now this impolitic military sentence of Vallandigham to banishment will probably elect a Copperhead Governor of the State. These blunders will tell hereafter when it comes to a general election, especially if the war drags. With successes in the field all the blunders of our political leaders will be covered up and forgotten.

It is said, in reply to those who object to the proceedings in the Vallandigham case, that the government has from the commencement of the war been in the habit of punishing civilians in Maryland. This is true, but it is proper to regard that State as in an attitude of rebellion. Ever since the attack upon the Massachusetts regiment in the streets of Baltimore, the government has had the right to treat the State as a semi-disloyal. It is not so with Ohio or New York, and the military arrest and deportation of a citizen of New York is really quite a different thing from the arrest of a rebel Baltimorean who may be found prowling around the outskirts of one of our armies. Gen. Lee with his army was in Maryland less than one year ago. When a rebel army is in the State of New York, and there are citizens of the State suspected of treason, no one who is loyal would blame the Commanding General for making summary arrests or inflicting summary punishments.

It is now understood here that the President will soon announce his purpose to protect colored soldiers at every cost. The Southern newspapers state that the rebel Congress authorizes the shooting of white officers who command colored regiments, and that the negroes are to be punished by State laws. We all know what that means—it is death by hanging. Mr. Stanton declares that whenever the rebels hang a colored soldier, a white rebel shall certainly swing. If the government is firm in the matter the rebels will back down. A little firmness is all that is needed.

Mr. Covode of Pennsylvania arrived here on Saturday, for the purpose of warning the government to prepare for cavalry raids along the border. If Gen. Hooker is to act on the defensive during the Summer, Maryland and Pennsylvania will suffer more or less from rebel incursions along their Southern frontiers. There is no doubt of this. John Covode is a shrewd man, and he believes in preparing in season for such a contingency. He is here also for another purpose—to caution the Administration against anything like an attempt on its own part to violate the Conscription Act by refusing to acknowledge the plain provisions of the Act. Mr. Stanton, it is well known, favors the nullification of the money-substitute section of the Act. He does not like the section, and it is said proposes to interpret it as permissive. I do not mean to charge upon the Secretary an intent to violate the law, but his actions have too much to do with his interpretation, and the enemies of the Administration will everywhere accuse the Secretary of violating the law. Mr. Covode says that if any government expects the people to obey the Conscription law, it must not set the example of violating one of its most important provisions. The negligence of the government to execute the law has been unaccountable. It would seem as if tardiness were an inherent vice of this Administration. We need more men in the field at this very moment, but Mr. Stanton, who is so prompt to throw certain men (the most of them cowards at heart) into jail, and so careless of law, has slumbered while our great army has been growing weaker and weaker. The Act passed by Congress is good enough. Under its provisions a fresh draft can be made every fortnight, if desirable. Men may be assessed to pay $300 over and once again. There is no limit to the repetition of the draft, and a fund can be raised large enough to enable the Secretary of War to offer a bounty to volunteers of $1,000 each. There is no trouble with the law as it is, but the Administration is weak, hesitating and divided in opinion. The best thing any member of it has said lately came from Mr. Stanton's lips, when he declared he would hang rebels with the flag of loyal black soldiers, sure as he lived—and this was only aural. Mr. Stanton has not made a formal announcement of what he will do, as he ought for the sake of the colored people, who are asked to fight, and who will soon be drafted. The Secretary has decided to let the draft operate upon the colored people like the white. Not many of this class can pay $300 to be exempt, and in consequence large numbers will be drafted, especially in this District. Some of them are getting alarmed, fearing their fate if they were to fall into the hands of the rebels. A simple announcement by the President or the Secretary of War would assure the colored people of the determination of the government to protect them. Let us have it, by all means.

Our new District Court discharged a colored boy two or three days ago, on the ground that the Court had no power to execute the Fugitive Slave law in the District of Columbia. Whereupon a scene ensued. Mr. Robinson gives the following account of it:

"Yesterday the fugitive slave Andrew Hall was released from custody by Judge Wylie. His former owner, and several Maryland slaveholders had been in the city, and seized him whilst he was coming out from the court room. By the kindly interference of several citizens he was rescued from their hands and taken before Judge Dean residing in the Provost Marshal's office, and stated the facts of the occurrence. A guard went down and took the colored freeman in charge."

The Star gives this account:

"Mr. Andrew Hall, the slave claimed by Mr. Tidball, was discharged yesterday afternoon he was allowed to proceed out of the room door with counsel, when his owner, backed by some friends, seized Hall by the collar. Thereupon a slight altercation ensued, consisting of hard knocks and sharp words. Finally the fugitive was released from the hands of his captors, taken into the room of Judge Wylie. Mr. Dean then asked that Mr. Duvall be punished for attempting to defeat the ends of justice, when the Court in arresting Hall after he had been discharged.

"Mr. Phillips, counsel of Mr. Dean's opponents, and Judge Wylie stated that as he had discharged the fugitive, he could not punishment to be granted in this case. Whereupon the Judge ordered the prisoner to be given a good dinner, and put in a little room and locked up, lest his friends, seeing his position outside, should rescue him. Meanwhile the crowd in the court room, anxious to see the prisoner, had crowded into the Judge's chambers, and had expended their energy for the Union from Mr. Dean even sweeter.

"The prisoner was then brought in, seated in his chair, and then put up and moved to the other end of the room, when some of the owner's friends, observing this, started off to prevent his escape.

"A scene of confusion followed, among the crowd that the owner of the slave intended to prosecute a warrant for the arrest of Mr. Dean, on charges of assault and battery, and having attempted to and succeeded in rescuing a fugitive slave from the hands of his master, while the master was engaged in doing his own property. It is alleged that Mr. Dean took the negro by the collar and drew him away from his master, and that the latter had been by the same place. And it is said that if Mr. Dean can be found guilty of these charges, he will be compelled to pay a fine of one thousand dollars, and to undergo six months' term of imprisonment. Of course this question will bring within it another consideration of the provisions of the Fugitive Slave law, and a decision as to whether the law can be made applicable to this District.

The police were sent for, and after a while a small detachment of them came and arrived at the scene of trouble. It was found, however, that they had no orders for to prevent a breach of the peace, or any undue disturbance of proceedings. Curem" or otherwise.

"The counsel for Mr. Bradley, counsel for Mr. Duvall, that they would not allow the fugitive to be carried off by any one until the case was decided.

"Mr. Dean remarked that the negro that he intended getting him a certificate of protection from the Provost Marshal, in order to secure him from rearrest except upon warrant."

The boy was put into the hands of the military, but the Court was afraid of the slaveholding interest of Maryland, or influential men in the service of the government, made haste to appoint a Slave Commissioner, and it remains to be seen whether the military authorities will deliver up the slave on the warrant of the new Commissioner. One fact is already established, that this Republican Administration is not thoroughly anti-slavery. AVON.

PERSONAL.

The venerable Joshua R. Giddings was prostrated by an apoplectic stroke the other day in Montreal. He was getting better when last heard from.

Anna E. Dickinson's lecture, delivered in the Brooklyn Academy of Music on the 22d, was attended by a large audience. She made a favorable impression.

The mountebank George Francis Train narrowly escaped a mob at Prescott, Canada, a few days since, his rabid abuse of the British having excited the popular ire.

President Lincoln, at the invitation of the Union League, will visit Philadelphia, if possible, on the Fourth of July next, to attend a grand Convention and celebration of the National Union League.

Col. John W. Forney is favorably mentioned in some of the loyal journals of Pennsylvania in connection with the Union nomination for Governor of that State. It is said he will be strongly pressed before the State Convention.

Judge Leavitt, whose opinion in the Vallandigham habeas corpus case has excited some attention, is a life-long Democrat, having received his appointment from Gen. Jackson himself. He is one of the oldest judges on the Federal bench.

Says The Evening Post: "Miss Anna Dickinson is but twenty-two years old. She was formerly employed in the United States Mint, at Philadelphia, and is said to have been dismissed from her place there on account of having expressed her opinion too freely of Gen. McClellan's incapacity."

Rev. Daniel Foster has resigned his post as Chaplain of the Massachusetts 33d, to take a Captain's commission in one of Gen. Saxton's negro regiments. Mr. Foster took a musket and fought in the ranks during the battle of Chancellorsville, in order, as he says, to give his men an example of bravery, which he had been preaching to them several months.

The fugitive slave, Hall, whose case has lately been before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia (see the letter of our Washington correspondent in another column), and about whose custody a conflict has existed between the civil and military authorities, was on Monday enlisted in the army, thus escaping further pursuit by his owner.

Signor Alberto Mario, one of the editors of The Nuova Europa, of Florence, was tried recently before an Assize Court, with the publisher, for his letter to the electors of Modena declining to accept the seat in Parliament which they had spontaneously placed at his disposal. The defendants were acquitted, the jury being unanimous, and The Nuova Europa proposes to republish the letter.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe has purchased a lot of ground in Hartford, on the banks of Park river, on which to erect a residence. The house is to be in the Gothic style, with pointed ornamental gables, battlemented chimneys, which project from the walls on the outside and serve as buttresses as well as ornaments, hooded windows with the sashes terminating in cupses and all the other peculiarities of that graceful style of architecture. The building is to be of brown stone and brick.

Henry Ward Beecher, in a speech at the late anniversary of the Home Missionary Society, said: "I say boldly that rather than have the States to resume their places under the Constitution with the system of slavery in them, all just as it was before, I had rather give every child that I have; I had rather embark upon a war of twenty years, with all its suffering and all its blood; and a war of twenty years, much as its miseries would be, would be cheap compared with the untold wretchedness of this nation if we undertake the Union again with slavery flourishing and rampant."

The Tribune says: "The fact that a successor has been appointed to Mr. Bayard Taylor as Secretary of Legation at St. Petersburg has been so stated in some journals as to make it the result of a personal difference between Mr. Taylor and Mr. Seward. The fact is quite otherwise. Mr. Taylor accepted the post in opposition to the counsel of valued friends, out of personal regard for Gen. Cameron and at his urgent solicitation. He knew that this acceptance imposed on him a heavy pecuniary sacrifice; as while the cost of living in St. Petersburg is considerable, the salary was not half the amount of his annual income as a writer and lecturer in his own country. The appointment of a new man is to be relieved Mr. Taylor from all obligation to continue in office, and he at once tendered his resignation. We understand that his eminent literary fitness for the position is so well understood and appreciated at Washington that a higher diplomatic position has been tendered him, which we trust he has ere this declined."

A dispatch from Boston, dated Monday evening, says: "At a meeting of the Emancipation League, in Tremont Temple this afternoon, a discussion took place between Senator Wilson and Wendell Phillips on the action of the Senate and the Administration relative to officers who had manifested unfriendly feelings toward negro enlistments and the Emancipation policy. Mr. Phillips charged that the Senate had never pu its ban on any such officer. Mr. Wilson denied the assertion, and said it had often done so. Mr. Phillips said it so the public had no knowledge of it, and therefore the act was of no public value. The only case coming to public knowledge was that of Gen. Stevenson, and he was promoted instead of being rejected. Mr. Wilson said that Gen. Stevenson was confirmed on the express and urgent recommendation of Gen. Hunter, in whom with advisers men had great confidence. The discussion was quite lengthy and warmly participated in on friendly grounds."

Chronicles of the War.

FRIDAY, MAY 29, 1863.

THE country has been in a state of [illegible] excitement since the news of the defeat of Gen. Grant's assault on Vicksburg reached us. The disaster was more serious than we have been willing to admit, and the effect upon the public mind was proportionately exaggerated and at the present writing we know little or no more than that Gen. Grant, on Saturday last, made an assault upon Vicksburg, he was repulsed with great slaughter,

NOT YET.

BY CAROLINE A. MASON.

Not yet;—along the purpling sky
We see the dawning ray;
But leagues of cloudy distance lie
Between us and the day.

Not yet;—the Aloe waits serene
Its promised advent hour—
A patient century of green
To one full perfect flower.

Not yet;—no harvest song is sung
In the ear of sleeping ray;
Nor hear we, while the blade is young,
The reaper's sickle swing.

Not yet;—before the crown, the cross;
The cross are the days of pain;
Before the gain the fearful loss,
And death ere Paradise!

Fitchburg, Mass. —Independent.

THE STATE OF THE COUNTRY.

A LECTURE,

BY WENDELL PHILLIPS.

From The Tribune of May 12.

MR. WENDELL PHILLIPS gave a lecture last evening, in the Cooper Institute, before a very large audience, on the State of the Country. The following is one of a series before the Sixteenth Ward Republican Association, and its President, Mr. Russell, introduced the orator as the man who had done more than any other except John Brown to bring this people to the banks of Jordan (loud cheers).

Mr. PHILLIPS said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I understand this is a Ward meeting—the Sixteenth Ward of New York, the banner Ward of the Radical Republicanism (applause). A very respectable-sized meeting for a Ward meeting (laughter). I am glad, for the first time in my life, to be adopted into the politics of New York city, and address a Ward meeting in behalf of justice and liberty. The text of my address, the lesson of the hour, it seems to me, is: Patience and Faith. Possess your souls in patience, not as having already conquered, not as if we had already perfect, but because the whole nation, as one man, has for more than a year set its face Zionward. Ever since September 22 of last year, the nation has turned its face Zionward, and ever since Burnside took the helm of the vessel, it has moved toward that point (cheers). Now, a nation moving, and moving in the right path—there is no reason for doubt, there is no occasion for despair; we have found rest at last for weary feet, and we are in earnest. Patience, the passion of great souls, makes conquest certain; when the human heart is once capable of this greatest courage, no matter what may be the clouds on the horizon, no matter how slow the motion, either official or national, may be, now and then God lifts the cloud, so as to show us the blue sky behind; no matter how dark political mistake or treachery may lower, the moment comes when the North says that it is all a mountain-range, and behind, the great heart of the nation beats true to its destiny (cheers). When I stood on this platform four months ago, men said: "You must be surprised at the blood-thirsty spirit of traitors are trying to take the great Capital of the North out of our army, and the Democratic party of the State is behind them." But one fine morning there was cautious hesitation in the Democratic party of Albany, and the Mayor of New York defeated him on his first move (cheers). When the Counties came to be represented, the leaders (round an army with officers and no rank and file. And the Colonel of Connecticut Copperheads, who was killed, not by a stripling, but by a girl (applause). Or if we must add to her merits that of Gen. Hamilton of Texas, the eloquent champion of the Union, why then we can almost say that out of the mouth of babes and sucklings God is perfecting liberty (applause). No, I have no doubt, no despair. Gradually, one after another, the shams of the North fall away. It is to be a long fight, no local struggle—only one part of a grand battle going on over the world, and which began ages ago—only one grand division, one army corps doing its duty in the great struggle" between free institutions and caste institutions, the world over. Freedom, honor and all the great interests that rest upon classes. We have only the outskirts of that struggle, and wherever caste lives, wherever class power exists, whether it be on the banks of the Thames or the Seine, whether by the side of the Ganges or the Danube, there the South has an ally as certainly as the surgeon's knife gives pain when it touches the living fibre (cheers). And against this mighty marshalling of everything that is strong in human selfishness, the Democracy of the North does battle. Now, that Democratic element in the North is strong enough, were it one and united, to have crushed all its foes on this continent in ninety days. It has been so in times past. The commencement of the struggle when, if the North had been a unit, the war might not have been ended in three months; and so ended it would have left slavery where it found it. But the North is not a unit. Slavery is not the North as a unit, democratic, intelligent, resolved, in earnest, the South never would have risked the struggle. But she knew that the North was divided into three great parties. The Democratic party, if they by the side of the Pamunkey or the James, there the South has an ally as certainly as the surgeon's knife gives pain when it touches the living fibre (cheers). And against this mighty marshalling of everything that is strong in human selfishness, the Democracy of the North does battle. Now, that Democratic element in the North is strong enough, were it one and united, to have crushed all its foes on this continent in ninety days. There was a time, years before the commencement of the struggle when, if the North had been a unit, the war might not have been ended in three months; and so ended it would have left slavery where it found it. But the North is not been a unit. Slavery is not the North as a unit, democratic, intelligent, resolved, in earnest, the South never would have risked the struggle. But she knew that the North was divided into three great parties. The Democratic party, if they by the side of the Ganges or the Danube